A burglar is said to be particular-ly afraid of two things when he en-ters a house in the mid hours of the night. One is a burning light and the other a barking watch dog. There are three other dangers to be There are three other dangers to be avoided: Frst, the occupant of the chamber entered may be a light sleeper, who is aroused at the lightest footfall or creak of a door; second, he may be lying awake at the time the entry is made; and, third, his loaded pistol may be within convenient reach to afford him protection. The billion of a burgler occurred in The killing of a burglar occurred in the suburbs of New Jersey on the night of the 10th inst., under circumstances in which there was neither a burning lamp nor a barking watch dog. The resident of the dwelling attempted to be burglarized was M. Choate, cashier of the Scaboard bank, in Newark. The burglar got into in Newark. The burging got into the house, but made so much noise in opening the door as to awaken Mr. Choate. His wife slept in an adjoin-ing room, and he called to ask her what occasioned the noise. She said it must be the wind. He thought differently, and seizing his revolver sprang from his bed and rushed into sprang from his bed and rushed into the hall where he lighted the gas. The burglar passed into Mrs. Choate's chamber and concealed himself be-hind her bed. He was observed by Mrs. Choate, who called to her hus-bend, apprising of that fact, and he entered discharging a shot at the burglar, which missed him. The latter ran to an open window and had got one leg over the sill when Mr. Cheate fired again, the bullet hitting him in the back and ranging through his heart. He got out on the roof of an extension, where, in a few moments, he was found dead. This particular burglar was armed with a self-cocking revolver which he was about to draw when the second shot ended his inglorious career. There is no class of criminals, unless it may be those who lie in wait to HARPER'S MAGAZINE commit murder, for which more horror is felt and less sympathy than the burglar, and it is safe to say HARPER'S VERNEL BURGER STORY FROM BURGER STORY BURGER STOR is not rejoiced at the deserved fate of the criminal victim.

The "iron heel of monopoly" is still upon the necks of the farmers and other classes of citizens of Manitoba and the Canadian northwest. Some of the down-trodden have been holding meetings and passing resolutions full of vigorous language, denouncing the railway monopoly, the manufacturers' menopoly, the land monopoly, the clevator monopoly—in fact, all the monopolies.
